In that living world in 2022, the IoB and IoNT are now expected to serve “biomedical, environmental, industrial and military” ends, as well as have applications in “other fields such as consumer electronics, life style and home appliances” (Abbasi et al., 2016) as part of the infrastructure for “smart” cities (Khan et al., 2020). So ubiquitous is the underlying research and development that nanomachines under the skin are essentially taken as a given among electrical engineers and senior members of IEEE — the world's largest professional association representing the field of technology, an organization that produces nearly a third of the world's technical literature in electrical and computer sciences. Such pervasive industry assumptions and revelations about revolutionary nano-communications technologies are of a piece with Harari's pronouncements that the products of the future will be human beings.

Importantly for the credibility of Anderson's (2022) parallel proposals regarding a MAC phenomenon delivered in COVID-19 “vaccines”, technology such as nanonetworks has been developing at “triple exponential” rates in recent decades, the Chief Scientist at NASA Langley, Dennis Bushnell, told his national security partners in 2001 (Bushnell, 2001). Nanotechnological developments including nanotags, “borgs”, and brain-machine interfaces were well underway as early as 2001 and “no pixie dust”, he informed his colleagues in the military-intelligence and environmental science worlds (Bushnell, 2001, 2011). During Bushnell's 2001 presentation, in which he covered the fruits of NASA's collaborations with DARPA, the CIA, the DoD and over 30 other agencies, Bushnell gave the intelligence community what he called a “heads up” that a new era would commence in 2020, ushering in a radically reconfigured technological and social landscape, which he dubbed the Bio-Nano Age.
